Amount of Gold in the Country.

Director of the mint Roberts has written a letter on the subject of the discrepancy in the treasury figures as to the amount of gold on hand and the amount actually in sight. He says in part:

The stock of gold in this country, as shown by the treasury estimates, was smart as a man of forty.

$1,043,525,117. You doubtless understand how these estimates are made, viz: by adding each year the output of the mints and the imports of domestic coin, and by substracting each year the exports of domestic coin, the amount recoined and an estimated amount for the consumption in the arts and manufactures. The Government holdings on May 1 amounted to $426,989,371, and the amount held by the national banks at their last statement was $195,769,872. These two items constitute the gold in sight, and together amount to $622, 759,243, leaving about $400,000,000 to be otherwise accounted for. It is, of course, not correct to say that this entire amount is missing from the country as it is known that state banks, trust companies and similar organizations at all times have a share of their regular ready money in gold, and that a corsiderable amount is in general circulation. It has been held, however, by some writers that the amount of gold outside the treasury and national banks cannot possibly be so great as the sum named, and that therefore the treasury estimate of the total stock is manifestly erroneous. This office and the sub-treasury in New York are engaged in an effort to check the figures that have been made from year to year. Mr. Muhleman is going carefully over the figures for exports and imports, and an effort is being made here to check the figures for consumption in the arts and to obtain such information as may be available as to the sums carried out of the country by travellers and not reported to the custom houses. The inquiry has not proceeded far enough to warrant any statement of results.'

Mr. Davis's Impressions of President Kruger.

My first meeting with President Kruger was very brief, and I learned little from it of him then which has not been made familiar to every one. Mr. Rietz brought me to his house and we sat on his porch, he loading and reloading his cavernous pipe the while and staring out into the street. The thing that impressed me first was that in spite of his many years, his great bulk and height gave you an impression of strength and power which was increased by the force he was able to tempt, by J. Pietraro, December 14, culated awkwardly but with the vigor 1880. put into his abrupt gestures. He gestias though he were pitching a quoit, and opening his great fingers and clenching them again in a menacing fist, with which he struck upon his knee. When he and when he did look at one, his eyes heavy waxen mask. In speaking his lips moved and most violently, but every lutely set. In his ears he wore little gold seared with some disease, were prowire screens.

So many men had come to see him and to ask him to talk on a subject for which the day for talk was past, that he had grown properly weary of it all, and before I could ask him for the particular in-Bulgaria, by four persons, armed with formation I hoped to obtain, he said, "I say what I have said before, we are fighting for our independence." He kept repeating this stubbornly several times, and then more specifically saying, "They are two hundred thousand, we are thirty thousand." "They have turned the lack men on the border against us.' We have all their prisoners to feed. 'It is like a big bully fighting a boy."-From "Pretoria in War Time," Richard Harding Davis, in the fiction number of Scribner's.

The Dandelion Not a Pest.

Writing of the dandelion, which Henry Ward Beecher named. "The Golden Prophet," and which James Russell Lowell apostrophized as "Dear common wayside flower," the writer of the Lowell Citizen's "Stories of the Street" says:

"Some one said the dandelion was an ugly pest. Perhaps it is. I wonder if he ever studied the pest; if he noted the intelligence it has, or the use it serves. First comes the flower with its wonderful ingenuity, and blooms for the day. and droops to the ground where the seed is germinated. Meanwhile the stem is growing and then it slowly rises until in tops the grass. Then the sepals fall and the fluffy ball is disclosed in all its downy beauty. Then the wind sweeps Pest! It is not so much of a pest when coffee? It is an article of food and were t eaten more plentifully, it would not be the pest it is."

The city of Buffalo is soon to have one of the most beautiful buildings in the western world, a public art gallery to cost upwards of $350,000. The building is the gift of J. J. Albright, a citizen of Buffalo, and a liberal patron of art, who desires to bestow upon his city a structure that will forever yield immeasurable pleasure to those who visit it, and become, as well, a center of culture and art. The only conditions imposed by the public spirited donor were that the city of Buffalo should furnish a site, and that the Fine Arts Academy of Buffalo, which is made the custodian of the property should raise a maintenance fund of $100,-000. The city promptly deeded the site requested, which is just within the limits of Delaware Park, overlooking the beautiful park lake. The Fine Arts Academy has complied with the terms of the gift as they applied to the maintenance fund, and the building will be hurried to com-art palace of the Pan American Exposition and thereafter become the permanent home of Buffalo's art collections. This magnificent edifice will be 250 feet long by 150 feet wide, the principal facade looking toward the east. The ouilding will stand upon a broad terrace 35 feet above the level of the park lake, which lies but a few rods below and to the eastward. The principal approach will be by a beautiful monumental flight of steps, the contour of the ground giving opportunity for stately embellishment. The terrace walls are to be of heavy granite blocks. Statuary, fountains, formal floral displays and lawns will complete the ornamentation of the

The style of architecture chosen is the classic Greek, both the eastern and western facades showing rows of rich, grace-ful columns. The style is Ionic. A semicircular colonnade forms the central figure of the west or Elmwood Avenue front. The building has broad wings at the extreme northern and southern ends, terminated by porches which will be reproductions of famous architectural works of ancient Greece. The highest peak is only 45 feet above ground. The Erechtheum of Athens has been a prolific source of inspiration for the architects, Messrs. Green and Wicks of Buffalo. The portico of the Erechtheum, famous for its caryatides, will be one of the works to be thus reproduced. The Erechtheum retary nor at me, but out into the street, was an ancient temple and is one of the most interesting of the ruins of the Acropolis at Athens. It was rebuilt after the Persian invasion, about 400 B.C.

Entering the building by way of the main approach one comes first to the ball of statuary, in the middle of the building, which is 71 x 100 feet. Directly west of this is the H micvele, a large semirings, and his eyes, which were red and circular room with tiers of seats and a rostrum, where lectures may be given be fore audiences of several hundred people North of Statuary Hall will be a gallery 5 x 85 feet. On either side of the corridor leading to this gallery are Library and Board rooms. Beyond, in the extreme north wing will be seven studio rooms, connected by a long corridor. In the western part of the building are two ante rooms and four large galleries. In the large light basement will be numerous other rooms for all sorts of uses in connection with the proper management of the building, such as bicycle and cloak rooms, lavatories, janitor's quarters electric lighting and heating, package and storage. The building will be strictly fire-proof, the materials being white

A King. It is a King that the assassin's hand has struck down at Monza, a King who in a reign of twenty-two trying years never failed in any kindly quality. Fearless in the face of disease as on the battlefield, just, merciful, a fosterer of the arts of learning, placing the welfare of Italy above the fortunes of his house, Humbert I deserved even more than his remarkable father the surname, il re galantuomo. In the breaking down of reputations of the leaders of all political parties the people of Italy have come to ook upon their King as the one man who stood for something stable and who might possibly extricate them from their difficulties.

Mary Cruy.

A pretty little legend belongs to the family of Lord Fingall. One of the most distinguished members was Sir Thomas Plunkett, Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench in Ireland. While a student he was walking one day in the Temple Gardens and saw a beautiful girl washing clothes in the river Thames and singing a plaintive Irish song. He recognized it as "The Lament of Mary Cruy" and re-called the fact that the wife and daughter of Sir Christopher Cruy, of Rath-more had been deprived of their estates by relatives after the death of Sir Christopher. It occurred to young Plunkett that the singer might be the daughter, and he asked her if she were Mary Cruy. She answered affirmatively, and the student impulsively offered his services to regain the lost property. He was successful, and eventually the clever and generous lawyer married the heiress whose rights he had regained.

They Saw Tennyson.

A new story-new, that is, to the pub lic-is told in a recently published diary by Sir Mountstuart E. Grant Duff. A party of Americans, he writes, once went to Freshwater to see Tennyson, but, as might have been expected, were refused an audience. As they departed disconsolately, they encountered Mrs. Cameron a friend of the laureate and expressed their disappointment. "Come with me," she said, and took them directly to the poet, whom she addressed thus: "Alfred these American ladies and gentlemen have crossed the Atlantic to see the great British lion, but have found only a bear!' The laureate could not resist that, and they had a pleasant fifteen minutes' visit.
